

King Stanley was a vile, jealous man. He was so gluttonous, he wouldn't let anyone visit him because he was so paranoid. Every day, there would be a faint whisper of the wind and that's when King Stanley felt the most loneliest... BUT that didn't stop him from doing his own selfish things. He was so self-centred, that he wanted to build the most extravagant village. In the middle would be a colossal statue of himself.

King Stanley searched and searched for the most popular town. One day he came across Bishops Tawton! And there was a spot for his village. He wanted people from all over the globe to explore his village and people did, people loved it so much they started to live there.

King Stanley was extremely annoyed so he bought mammoth animals from all over the world. The moment the villagers saw the animals, they were over-whelmed. Soon the villagers had had enough. They were sick and tired of cleaning the animals and paying King Stanley just so he could buy more stuff for himself.

That month, King Stanley revisited Stanley village but...instead of seeing humans and animals he saw isolation. The villagers had all left and the animals had all died as no one was looking after them. King Stanley felt remorse for his old villagers so he decided to take off his crown and buried it on Odden hill( also known as Codden hill) King Stanley's crown is still buried here today!
